THE TRIBUNE.

TEMPERANCE IN THE NAVY.—A very interesting meeting on the subject of Temperance was held on Tuesday evening, on board the United States ship North Carolina, under direction of the Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Harris. One or two meetings had been previously held on board by permission of the Commanding Officer, preparatory to the formation of a Society, which took place on Tuesday evening, in the close of the meeting under the title of "The Marine Temperance Society of the United States ship North Carolina." The meeting was elegantly addressed by several gentlemen usually known to the community as the successive advocates of Temperance, two of whom had themselves been seamen and were well able from their own experience and observation, to depict the misery and degradation attendant upon the drinking habits of sea-men. Their appeals were listened to with marked attention by the almost entire crew, including a number of the officers, and on reading the Constitution and Pledge, some thirty or forty of the best men of the ship came immediately forward and signed their names as members of the Society. The meeting closed by an election of officers for the Society, and leaving the ship's company.

GODLOVY.—We have already announced that Prof. LYELL, from England, will commence in this city on Wednesday evening a Course of Eight Lectures on Geology, and that Prof. MILLMAN of Yale College will commence on the first week in May, a Course of Ten Lectures on the same subject. A few days since, a delegation from a Juvenile Lyceum in Albany called at the Exchange Lyceum in this city, for the purpose of instituting Exchanges in Geological and other Specimens of Nature. Numerous Schools in this City and other places give Geology a prominent place in their studies. Inquiries from parents are frequent where you can find Schools where the Natural Sciences are taught, and bitter complaints that inadequate books are pressed upon your children, greatly to their injury.

JONES'S BOOK-KEEPING, published

120 Broadway.

Tadpoles!—We think it admirably calculated to lead a student to a thorough acquaintance with the theory and practice of that useful art.

W. H. WILLIS, of the firm of Willis & Brothers,

A. W. SPES & CO.,

CORNILL, BROTHERS,

W. F. & S. WARING,

I am convinced that his plan of operation is decidedly the best to impart a thorough knowledge of Book-keeping both theoretically and practically.

W. H. SPESSE, Cashier and Accountant, and with Anster, Wilmerding & Co.

The merits of the work command it strongly to the attention of every youth who chooses commerce for his career.

H. SCHAPER, with Messrs. Ward & King,

S. H. PIERCE, with Messrs. A. & J. Co.

S. H. WHITEHORN,

with Cutler, Bailey, Meritt & Co.

It enables the pupil to understand the principles on which the various operations are founded.

R. ADRAIN, late Pro. of Math., &c., Coll. Col.

The clever exercises founded your simple and rational division of labor into distinct parts, "thus," it is not distinguishing single entry from double entry, in my estimation, admirable.

JOHN H. SHEPPARD,

Commercial Department, Grammar School, Coll. Col.

The explanations are exceedingly clear—the arrangement excellent.

JAMES SEXTON, Master in the Commercial Department, Grammar School, Coll. Col.

We know Mr. Jones to be an able account and a successful teacher of Book-keeping.

JOHN HAGERTY & SONS,

I leads the learned to a full and thorough knowledge of the important principles of the art.

J. V. YOUNG, of Coll. Col.

He has struck out a new method of teaching the science, human of exercises similar to the plan usually adopted in teaching the arithmetic, and we have no doubt this will be a great improvement.

The above views are corroborated in the report of a special committee of the American Institute appointed to examine its merits.

Instruction is given by the Author, as usual, at his Rooms, 123 Broadway.

UMBRELLAS and PARASOLS.—

MACDONALD & BYRD will call the attention of Clerks and Dealers to their extensive assortments of the Theory of Universal Attraction and Repulsion,

The first volume was merely a prospectus of the work, intended to procure the means of publishing the rest by subscription; but little or no notice being taken of the prospectus, the publication was suspended. He had bestowed eight years' labor in working out the principles of his discovery, before he attempted to publish them; and having discovered that certain parts of his theory were still incomplete when he published the first volume, he resolved to withdraw it from circulation and continue his studies. After seven years' additional labor, he was preparing to go to press, when Napoleon returned from the Island of Elba, in 1815, and France was again thrown into a state of agitation. During the short reign from the time of his return from Elba until the battle of Waterloo, Fourier retired to his sister's, at Tallis, in France, where he might continue the preparation of his manuscripts. This sister was a widow, living in a country village near Bayley, where her husband had been Sub-Prefect, a function similar to that of County-Sheriff in England. Fourier had another sister living at Bayley, where he resided chiefly from 1816 to 1821. Several of his nephews are now residing in that neighborhood. One of them is a barrister, another a notary (a conveyancing attorney). As he always led a very quiet and studious life, little is known of his particular habits and private transactions during his residence at Lyons from 1799 to 1816, but it is probable that they were in every way similar to his general bearing from that time to his death. He was thoughtful and reserved; more studious of comforting and assisting the poor, who surrounded him, than desirous of flattering the rich, or courting their acquaintance. Indeed, he had an absolute dislike to them; because they are generally hypocritical in proportion to their pretensions to politeness and good breeding. In the present state of society, falsehood and dissimulation are the stock-in-trade of politicians. There need be no fears of the skin-chapping in the cold weather, after using it.

WORSTED DAMASKS and RAT-

TINETS.—W.M. MITTS, No. 50 Beaver-st.

offers a large assortment of Worsteds Damasks and Rat-tinets, suitable colors for carriage-linen, also Super-Incan Crimson and Cherry colored Worsteds Damask, Black Lastings, Silver Drab and Blue Goods, Fustians, &c.

To Gentlemen with Heavy Boards and Tender Faces.

ALEXANDER RAMSEY'S Saponaceous

Oil, a most compound, for shaving, is particularly recommended. The only ingredients of it is what it contains, and nothing else. It is made of the best, the best, and most durable materials, which supports the head against the cold, in more known to the subscriber.

There need be no fears of the skin-chapping in the cold weather, after using it.

If it does not prove to be a good article, it may be returned, and the money will be cheerfully refunded, provided it is purchased at retail, of the subscriber.
